The sun, dispelling the showery clouds that threatened to dampen the magnificence of Honolulu's Seventh Annual Floral Parade, shone down

Rain fell at intervals yesterday and last night and, with the high wind that was blowing, prospects were more than gloomy last night. Indeed, it looked as if the Floral Parade would either have to be postponed or abandoned, or, if it really started, as if it would be a bedraggled and sodden spectacle.

But this morning the sun came out on schedule time as if it had never had any notion of hiding its face behind streaming clouds and disappointing the eager thousands who had been planning for weeks and months on taking part in or watching the great parade that is Honolulu's principal fete and that has acquired a reputation throughout the world that rivals that of the Mardi Gras of New Orleans and the carnivals of Nice and Rome.

The drooping and bedraggled flags, banners and bunting that had been hung the day before dried rapidly un-

GREATEST MILITARY PAGEANT IN THE HISTORY OF HONOLULU

Honolulu has seen military pageants before today, many of them, when uniformed men, armed with the grim implements of war, marched through the streets of the city. Often before has the steady tramp of marching hosts thrilled the hearts of the populace; many times have the fluttering folds of the flag awakened to enthusiastic applause the patriotism that nowhere in the whole great country is felt more deeply than in these islands, so little time ago a foreign nation, and independent sovereignty.

But never before has there been witnessed in Honolulu so magnificent a military parade as that which passed through the streets of the city this morning and marched in review before high military and naval officers, territorial and municipal executives and the crowding throngs called out to watch the defenders of the country tramping steadily to the time of the strains of military bands.

Today every branch of the service was represented. Among the 2500 men who marched through the streets of the city were divisions from the infantry, the cavalry, marines, sailors, engineers, hospital corps and branches, artillery and signal corps, in addition to the Hawaiian national guard and the Kamehameha cadets. The parade was considerably more than half an hour in passing the reviewing stand in front of the McKinley High school.

Long before the time for the march to start the streets were thronged with people. All along the line of march they waited patiently, but the greatest crowds gathered at the Palace grounds, whence the parade was to start, and at Thomas Square, opposite which was the reviewing stand.

A few little sputters of liquid sunshine occurred at intervals, not enough, however even to dampen the white clothes of the ladies. The rains of yesterday and last night had made the streets rather muddy in some places, and the long march of the cavalry men had not added to the appearance of their mounts. But fortunately they had time before the parade started to groom their horses, and a brave spectacle they presented as they poured in a long and imposing stream along the streets.

Awaiting the signal to take up the march the cavalry occupied Merchant street, their sturdy ranks extending from the Palace gate to Bethel street. The other branches of the service gathered in and about the Palace grounds.

As previously reported, the line of march extended from the Capitol grounds out King street to Victoria, up Victoria past the reviewing stand in front of the McKinley High school to Beretania street, back into town on Beretania street to Nuuanu. Here the several bodies making up the parade dispersed.

Several bands were in the line of divisions of the parade as it passed the reviewing stand. And a brave spectacle they made as they marched by. The equipment and accoutrements of every man and horse shone, the grim rifles were carried at the proper angle, the officers saluted precisely with their swords, the non-commissioned officers raised hand to rifle stock, and the eyes of every enlisted man, at the word of command, "eyes right," turned toward the stand upon which stood their high commanders.

The regular army and naval officers were particularly generous with their applause as the national guard and the Kamehameha cadets passed in review in line of company and battalion. And their applause was merited, for the men and boys made an excellent showing. Their alignment was almost perfect, their set-up good and their stride had the swing and rhythm

MISSIONARY REFUGEES REPORT REIGN OF TERROR IN CHINA

Chinese revolutionists are turning after their trying experiences in the bands as quickly as they are disbanded from the rebel army, is the news brought from China this morning by the P. M. S. China. A family by the name of Nelson, returning missionaries, have lost a daughter, massacred while out visiting, supposedly by revolutionists. The China is indeed a missionary ship this time, for practically all the passengers are missionaries, who have been trying for months to get back to the United States from the land of strife. Evidently China will be in the throes of internal dissension for a long time to come.

The missionaries in the inland towns are now terror-stricken, for the revolutionaries, who have been trained to fight the imperialists, are turning themselves into brigands in large numbers. They have now the advantage of modern warfare training, and this knowledge evidently they are putting to excellent use, for themselves, for they are robbing everyone that will yield up anything, irrespective of the nationality of the victim. If the accounts brought here by the China are true, then it would seem that international intervention must come before very long in order to stop the disturbances and protect foreigners. Mr. and Mrs. P. Nelson and four sons are returning to the mainland over the country.

CAVALRY ON PALACE SQUARE.

ARTHUR F. WALL,

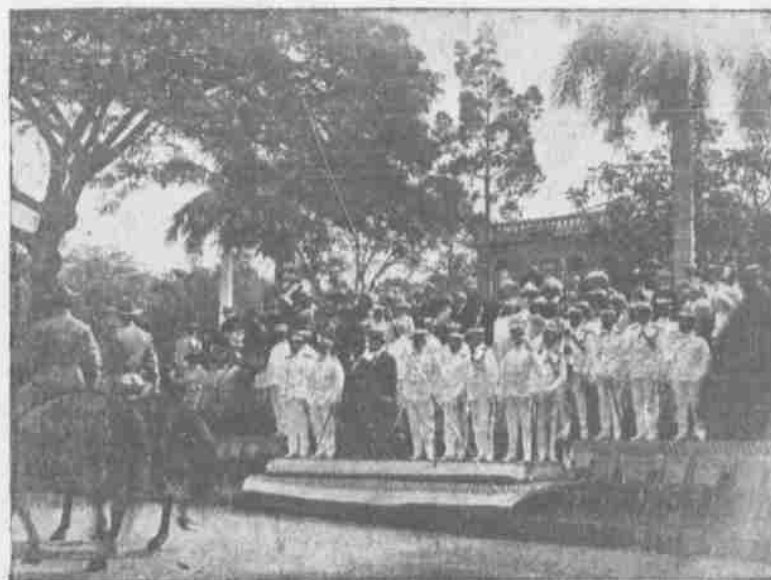

Director General 1912 Floral Parade.

this afternoon on the most gorgeous spectacle that has ever been witnessed in this city. For the floral parade of this year eclipsed in grandeur all of its six predecessors and set a new standard to be lived up to in years to come.

Never before were seen so many decorated automobiles and floats, never before were the decorations so beautiful and never before were the designs so dainty nor the ideas expressed in them so carefully carried out.

It might seem that six floral parades would have exhausted the available ideas for designs, but the event proved that this was not so. Many of the designs for decoration were, of course, conventional, although none the less beautiful for that, but there were in addition many new and striking ideas exemplified in the decorated automobiles, automobile floats and horse-drawn floats.

There was much less confusion at the starting place than on any previous occasion. All arrangements had been carefully planned and they were all carried out without a hitch. The parade started promptly at the signal of Marshal Brown and each division fell into line in its appointed order and moved off expeditiously.
